

Transitioning senior patients from acute care facilities continues to be inefficient, inconvenient, and fraught with risk. Most are still done via paper and fax machines. In addition, the decision on the patient's most appropriate next level of care is often made without using patient data or using only superficial information like primary diagnosis. It shouldn't be this way.

naviHealth Chief Medical Officer Dr. Jay LaBine discusses this in depth with Colin Hung of Healthcare IT Today.

View the full interview here.